

DNAP 660: POPULATION WELLNESS & HEALTH PROMOTION (EPIDEMIOLOGY)

Epidemiology focuses on the distribution and determinants of disease frequency in human populations. This course prepares the DNAP student to use epidemiological strategies to examine patterns of illness or injury in groups of people. Concepts of health, risk, and disease causality are examined. Implications for development of data based programs for disease/injury prevention and control as well as policy implications will be discussed.

Credits: 4.00